William Davidson Lecture

Teaching, Researching and Caring for Patients in Pittsburgh: Novel Strategies featuring

Wednesday, May 17, 2017, 8 - 9:30 a.m.

Internal Medicine Grand Rounds
Auditorium, Beaumont Hospital, Royal Oak

Presenter:

Arthur S. Levine, M.D., Senior Vice Chancellor for the Health Sciences, John and Gertrude Petersen
Dean of the School of Medicine, University of Pittsburgh; Professor of Medicine and Molecular Genetics

Objectives:

- ◆ Identify opportunities to incorporate new basic science-based diagnostic and treatment approaches into the medical school curriculum.
- ◆ Explain how to incorporate social determinants of health into the curriculum.
- ◆ Show how medical students have the opportunity to participate in rigorous scientific research, giving them an appreciation for how research advances medical science.
- ◆ Describe how students, along with faculty and staff, can evaluate the curriculum in light of evolving scientific and medical knowledge and practices.
- ◆ Support students in providing longitudinal care for individual patients, instilling compassion and engaging them as partners with their patients and other members of the health care team.

Target Audience:

Faculty, physicians, residents and fellows.
